“ I just found out Uncle Woody died. I spent so many summers as a child there, learned a lot. I will never forget Aunt Emogene's homemade biscuits and gravy. Uncle Woody would always have to have the corner pieces. When I took my newborn son to visit we went to feed him Gerber and Uncle Woody stuck a spoonful of biscuits and gravy in his mouth. Lol. I have and will miss him dearly.

“ I will always remember how he did my brother one day. He made him get up with the chickens all dark outside. Then he sat him down for breakfast. Aunt Emogene always made chocolate and white gravy. She always made both kinds, but Uncle Woody always ate the white gravy and followed breakfast with a cig. This one particular day, he forced John, my brother to get up and when they were sitting at the table uncle woody said "You like biscuits and gravy?" and John said "Yes, I do." He goes "Then, sit right there and watch me eat this." That will never get out of my head and make me laugh every time. He was a great jokester and I will also remember him raising his beagles and coondogs, and you could always tell how much he loved aunt Emogene.

You will surely be missed Uncle Woody. I love and miss you.

“ As children we use to go to his house and ride horses on his track and he would tell and show us how to hold the horses in the racking gate. Melinda was riding our horse Lightning and she was moving on. She came around the curve and went down the horse went the opposite way and there went Uncle Woodrow grabbing her to make sure she was ok. He sat her back in the saddle and made her go again. He always had a nice garden and we ate a lot out of it. Ate a lot of meals at Woodrow's house. Always was a nice man. Never a hard word did I ever hear from him.
